#TRENDINGNOW

In some cases the fashion trends reflect the mood of the public in terms of popular clothes and accessories and in other cases fashion trends impose the changes in the public taste. Fashion trends in their presence predetermine their transitory character. But when this or that particular fashion trend is in full swing no one is likely to predict that its end is soon to come. The abundance of designer houses is a clear manifestation of the demand that the society provides for exclusive continually changing clothes styles.

FASHION ICON

Fashion, small but lithe, with a majestic hairstyle—half-updo, half-blank, not so much caused by the stylist's art as by the curious impression that if you're a fashion icon, the world should be your movement on 72th Avenue, keeping up a steady stream of conversation. She's just arrived from Paris, where she dived open her flat on a screw in a hotel room, then almost scared her glass while waiting for a photographer's assistant to return her camera to the lobby. Also, her Blackberry was supposed to be synced with her computer by an assistant, but instead both of them went on the fritz. "I just feel like bugs, bugs, bugs, everything's been going wrong lately," she says, settling herself onto a high-backed cream chair. "I'm so happy to be finally in New York, where I can relax. I love the city in August, when everyone's gone; I can take a deep breath."

Guinness, an Irish brewery heiress and the co-edit of a spy, of age of Greece's richest shipping families, should by rights be vacationing in Southampton or Cape Cod this month, not dressing on the subject in Manhattan. But she is bored by money—a good lesson, in her, as in how others wealth has been accompanied with a flowing, free-spirited style that has made her a natural for fun-spinning fashion—when it's not to flaunt—and everyone's favorite high-heels, and I want to talk about a certain color," says Guinness, an. "You know, a lot of people think they're going to get to a person of a certain size, but in fact that place doesn't really exist. I think life is about having the adventure of the curiosity of an other person and the imagination of a child."

That coach a clear from her outfit today, which, as usual, is one part old-world haircut, ruffled in diamonds and furs, and one part eccentric artist, always looking to create drama and irony with her clothes. Here wearing a tight-fitting grey wool dress that she designed herself, with enormous strands of antique diamonds wrapped around her wrists, a blue gemstone ribbon tied loosely on her neck, and eight-inch Mary Jane studded wedges designed by Londoner Rebecka Harris—the multitudes, in this case, being the inclusion of the heel with the dress, so that she feels as the set, so, guests. "I found it convenient to have heels at one point," she explains drily. "Then I switched more often."

Guinness belongs to a tradition of thoroughly rich fashion freak, like Isabella Blow—the patron of whose clothing at Christie's she presented last month by leaving the entire collection—or the Italian avant-garde Anna Buggi, or lender-cut icon Iris Apfel, the 92-year-old New Yorker with the oversize glasses. She's both a frivolous customer for designers, known to buy every piece for one when she becomes enthusiastic about a collection, and also a creative force, an artist in her own right. "I think the world's just gone completely mad, with everyone wearing the same things, even toddlers," says Guinness, who, despite her wacky design sense, speaks softly and without bravado. "I mean, Elizabeth Taylor wouldn't have been told by a stylist to wear this and say it's fun—however."
